After spending several days in Rest Camps in the vicinity of Southampton, England, the Brigade crossed the Channel and by June 9th, 1918, all the Units, including the 107th, 108th and 109th Field Artillery and the 103rd Ammunition Train and the 103rd Trench Mortar Battery were established in the new American Camp at Camp De Meucon, in the heart of quaint old Brittany. Here the Brigade received its full complement of materiel and horses and underwent an eight weeks course of training in the use of the French 75 s and 155 mm. Howitzers. On August 6th, 1918, the entrainment for the front commenced and by the 8th of August, the 53rd Field Artillery Brigade had rejoined the 28th Division in the Chateau Thierry salient just east of Fismes. Here the Units of the Brigade remained in constant action under continual fire until September 5th, when the advance was ordered which culminated in the crossing of the Vesle River. The attack continued until September 8th, 1918, when orders were received relieving the Division. An eleven-day hike from the Marne to the Argonne Forest then followed. The route of the Brigade from Treloupe sur Marne passed through Epernay, Vitry le Francois and Contresson and finally ended in the heart of the Argonne Forest. The batteries went into position in the vicinity of Croix de Pierre on the evening of September...
