Excerpt: . . . would follow a ballistic trajectory for less than half of the launch of a few U. S. CPGS missiles but is unsure their flight (whereas ICBMs and SLBMs are ballistic of their location and payload (conventional or nuclear), for the entire flight) and would be able to steer around Russian leaders would be unlikely to conclude that the 68 countries such as Russia. Sugden reaches a similar conclusion: CBMs conventional ballistic missiles based in a bolt-from-the-blue attack with so few missiles. At the continental United States and at forward locations the very least, Russian leaders would have strong incentives that carry boost-glide vehicles, ideal for shaped trajectories to wait until they had more information about the 69 targets, would mitigate the risks of ambiguous warning. targets of such a small strike before employing their nuclear forces. The Obama administration requested 136.6 million to further develop the boost-glide component of the CSM for FY11. The Budget Item Justification stated that the United States could reduce this through capability. It also requested 69 million to test and evaluate confidence-building measures. For example, the United States could invite Russia, China, and other nations to participate in some or...
