By Adam Tendler

Dissonant States Press. Paperback. Book Condition: New. Paperback. 244 pages. Dimensions: 8.0in. x 5.3in. x 0.8in. Kirkus Indie Book of the Month: An honest, searching exploration of the artist as a young man. . . . part travelogue, part coming out story, 88x50 is an unsentimental and at times harrowing self-portrait of an artist in the act of self-becoming. Tendler uses the book as an opportunity to rethink the very nature of memoir with web links to photographs, performance clips and journal entries that draw the reader even deeper into the experience of the America 88x50 tour. --Kevin Brannon, Lambda Literary . . . a harrowing, moving, glowing book. . . 88x50 is one of the finest memoirs by any performing artist, and a powerful testament to the great American project of self-invention and mastery. Adam Tendler thrives on challenge, an astonishing pianist and a brilliant writer, altogether in a class of his own. - Rick Whitaker, author of An Honest Ghost and Assuming the Position: A Memoir of Hustling With exquisite candor, Tendler charts his own brave journey across America to wrestle with the truth of his sexuality and his potential as a musician. Nothing less than the failure of a...
