C. : United States Environmental Protection Agency, Office of Research and Development, 2005 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)70348386 Subject: Asthma -- Environmental aspects -- United States. Excerpt: . . . Research Highlight: Studies Show That Diesel Exhaust Particles Trigger Asthma Attacks in Animals An EPA-funded research team at the University of California, Los Angeles, School of Medicine, studied mice to determine whether particles from diesel exhaust alone could trigger asthma attacks. Past studies showed that inhaling diesel exhaust particles in combination with an allergen could make a person much more sensitive to that allergen by activating the persons immune system in a process called adjuvancy. However, although adjuvancy could increase asthma prevalence in the long term, scientists observed asthma are-ups only hours or minutes after exposure to high concentrations of particles. The University of California, Los Angeles, researchers set out to establish the biological basis for this immediate effect. The researchers faced the challenge of making a mouses lungs highly sensitive to pollutants so that they would resemble the lungs of people with asthma, prone to swelling that narrows the airways. Scientists often approach this problem by sensitizing the animals lungs with an allergen called ovalbumin. The University of California, Los Angeles, team also used a novel approach involving mice bred with a genetic mutation that made their lungs highly sensitive. When exposed to diesel exhaust particles, these mice showed signs of airway inammation even though they had not been exposed to ovalbumin or any other allergen. Study results support the assertion that diesel exhaust particles alone could trigger asthma are-ups in mice, and these ndings are an important indicator for use in additional asthma research. As a next step, researchers point to the...
