The technical department included technical, commercial and agricultural subjects. The recreational and physical education department took charge of the gymnasium work and prescribed physical exercises, provided by the school, and acted as liaison officers with the cooperating volunteer agencies that furnished recreation and entertainment for the hospital patients. The supervisor of aides had a position similar to dean of faculty women, as already indicated. The system of record keeping was elaborate. The new service, which touched so closely all other branches of hospital work and which was joined up with the home service of the Red Cross and the work of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, necessarily had to be exact in its records. Profiting by past experience it would now be possible to devise a somewhat simpler form of record, but even when reduced to lowest possible terms, much record work would be required. The records included prescriptions by the medical officer, followed by the survey record of the interviewing office. The survey record contained a statement of a man s army record, his identification data, a summary of his diagnosis, the special prescription, if any, the psychological examination, the social, vocational and educational history. Other records kept track of the assignment to classes and the progress, both curative and educational. Copies of the report record forms are included in the official history. For civilian practice undoubtedly appropriate forms would have to be especially devised. It is entirely probable, however,...
