The pupil leaves geography behind him as he enters the High School, having had instruction in it, part or all the time, for 18 terms. I am bound to confess that I have never had experience as a teacher in a city Graded School; also to bear witness that I have been told on excellent authority that I know nothing about public education in a city. Possibly this last is true; possibly, too, a state of things exists in our cities that makes it necessary to drizzle out geography to the children six years; but if so, then a city Public School is no place to send a child of fair wit to learn that branch of study. I undertake to say that a bright...
